Strathcona has many different working parts. There are staff and students; grades 10, 11, and 12; groups, clubs, and teams; staff and students; curricular and extra curricular opportunities. While these are common elements of any high school, these parts uniquely come together to form the rich and vibrant culture we have at Scona. This is not merely by chance. It all comes together through the collective hard work of all the members of our community. The synthesis of all these parts is what makes our school what it is right now. This book cannot be more than snapshot of where we are in 2018/19, but it will take its place among the other 110 yearbooks that come together to tell the story of the school.

SYNTHESIS

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

The Strathcona School Advantage

This book that you are holding in your youthful hands may become a piece of history. As the world changes it may become an artefact of the early 21st century, a record of how young people gathered at school to learn and mobilise to make a difference in the world. The yearbook will be the proof that you were part of an exceptional year at a wonderful school: Strathcona.

In a few words, I cannot do justice to the school's extraordinary, varied achievements of 2018-2019 which are reflected in this comprehensive yearbook. Thank you to Mr. Greg Forsyth and all those who worked diligently to produce this chronicle of the past remarkable year.

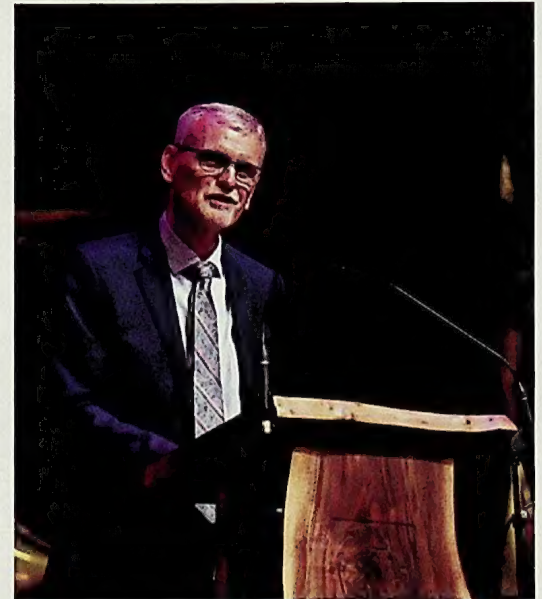

Knowing so many of you students, I am certain that the years you spend here will always be a big part of the foundation for the rest of your life. I am confident that you will go on to meet the challenges that emerge in our unpredictable future and that the values you have clarified for yourselves at Strathcona will give you courage to play your part in society to the best of your ability.

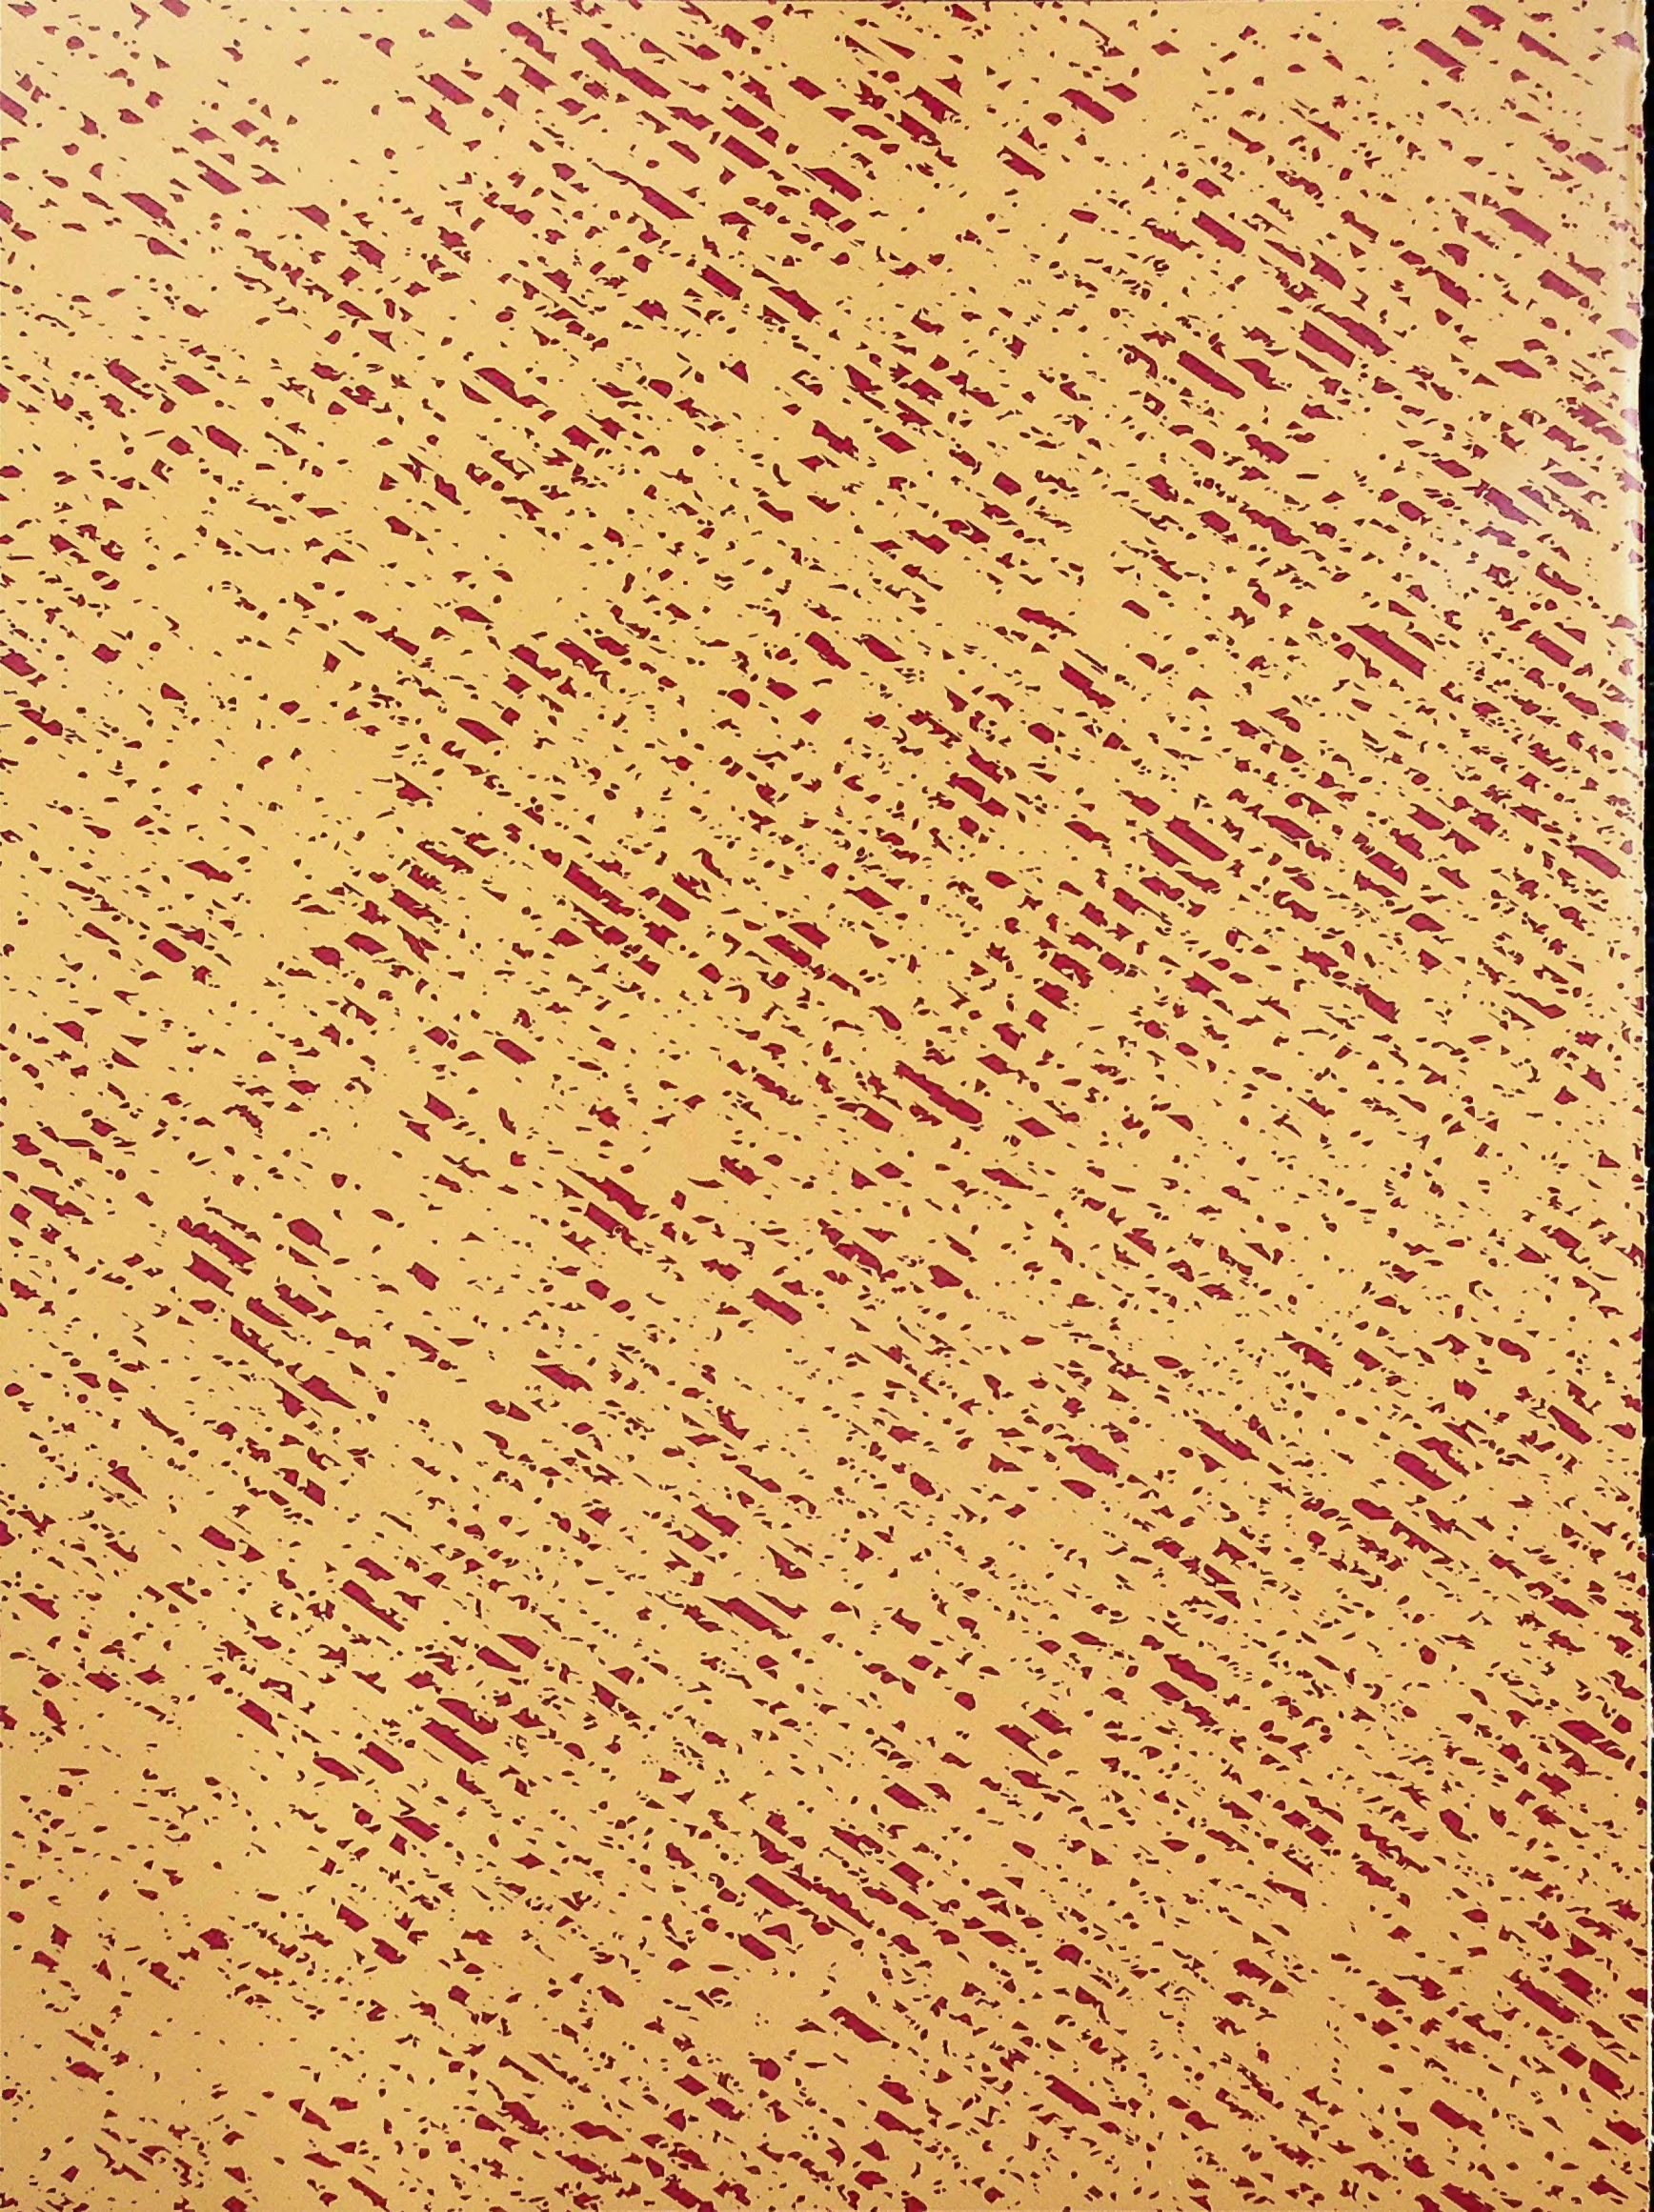

During a time when many reactionaries around the world are fearfully closing their borders, we are transcending them. We have taken up the "quarrel" of "Flanders Fields" with the foe of indifference and given $560,000 to combat suffering in the world. Two events on the past year's calendar, Remembrance Day and the Bike-a-thon, reflect our central tenets: we do learn lessons from the past and we demonstrate compassion for those suffering in desperate situations.

The contributions that you students have made while at Strathcona School exhibit the incontrovertible truth that you are already living full and meaningful lives, connected to community and global efforts to make the world a better place. I have experienced the climate of tolerance in the school; I have been motivated by your respect and support for the range of differences amongst us. I urge you to continue with these activities; to keep challenging yourselves and pushing the boundaries. It's not about money and titles; it's about what comes from the heart and living your life "...as one who serves," that will give you genuine satisfaction, meaning and a rich life.

Decades from now you may open this book and recall the exciting high school years of your youth. My wish for you when that moment arrives, is that you will smile and know that you have seized every opportunity presented to you in the years between.

EVENTS

Events

Scona never lacks for ways in which to excel. In our athletics, academics, arts and student leadership, remarkable accomplishments and strong legacies have built and solidified themselves this year. While "no-cut teams" represent a cornerstone of our athletic philosophy, so too is this inclusive nature present in all that we do. Scona Lords have opportunities in incredibly diverse areas, and that is something worthy of celebration.

Such vast breadth of opportunity, however, at a certain point forces prioritization for each individual. It is simply not feasible that any one person could experience every single one of our many programs, teams or clubs in just a short three year period. While of course these choices help us all to cater to our own interests, it also forces that the diversity of the community will find itself to be stronger than in any one individual.

This is why we place such importance on school wide events, and projects that include the entirety of our community. While we can excel separately in such a variety of ways, community projects that serve to promote a sense of unity and collective spirit find themselves to be exceptionally meaningful.

These events have not taken on any one "cookie cutter" form, and are rather exceptionally different from one another, again catering to such diversity of our student body. Welcome Week, at the very beginning of September, was all about encouraging new connections amongst Lords (particularly for our new Grade 10 students). We achieved this through time honoured traditions such as our mass-participation game of musical chairs, an outdoor barbecue, and a food truck lunch event with live music from our very own Sam Johnson. Later that month, FanPede saw hundreds of Scona Lords march through the community in full "blackout" gear to cheer on our phenomenal football team at Foote Field.

The football team, however, were not the only exceptional individuals featured within our school events. The Lords In Talent show highlighted off our very best in dance, music and other "unique" abilities. If these talents included speed eating, well, we had an event for that too, with our Pumpkin Pie Eating Contest (where all were impressive, but Mr. Johnston especially destroyed). In other events, we also took time to celebrate Halloween, Remembrance Day, and Festivus before we dismissed for the winter break. Valentines' Day coincided with Puttin' On The Ritz, our formal or "Touch of Class" event.

No other student project, however, compared in scale or magnitude to our Scona Initiative campaign. Following a school-wide vote, Lords selected Medecins Sans Frontieres for our 2019 Global Initiative, "Beyond Borders". Over the course of four months, we sought donations on the doorstep, through bake sales and with our community connections, to create the largest student fundraiser in North America (and possibly world) history. The campaign culminated in a 24 hour bikeathon that saw the participation of 1300 Scona Lords, and featured entertainment such as a hypnotist, a 4 a.m. dodgeball tournament, an exotic petting zoo, Dude-Perfect-style trick shots, an RC grand prix, slip n' slide, fondue room, mock casino, silent dance, and field trips to attractions around the city. In the campaign's honour, March 15th, 2019 was proclaimed "Beyond Borders day in Edmonton" by Mayor Don Iveson.

Throughout all of this, we have relied so heavily on an extremely dedicated team of student volunteers. Hundreds and hundreds of Scona Lords have been involved in their own way with these types of projects, and to each of them we owe our sincerest thanks. To each and every one reading this that went above and beyond in their service to our school, be it those in technical theatre, volunteers for athletic tournaments and games, or members of the Students' Union, thank you for all you've done to make this year at Scona so great!

ATHLON

ATHLETICS

This 2018-2019 season was another record-breaking year for our athletic teams.

The year in sports kicked off with a bang as Lords packed the bleachers at Foote Field to cheer on our football team as they played their first game of the season. Despite the wintry conditions, an impressive number of students joined to march in our annual Fanpede. Though the team lost this game, they did better than many expected this season after moving up a conference to face many tough opponents.

School spirit continued to run high as the cross-country team tore up the trails at the Cross Country City Championships. Undeterred by the frigid conditions, athletes once again braved the snow and mud to secure Scona's 43rd consecutive sweep. An impressive 23 athletes qualified for Provincials. In particular, the senior girls division was a sea of red as 8 athletes finished in the top 10. At the provincial championship, our cross-country team fought hard to win back the provincial plaque.

During the winter, the stream of athletic achievements didn't stop flowing. The Scona swim team won their 33rd consecutive city championship. This powerful team, made up of over 150 students, was proud to bring home this achievement. The swimmers' many hours spent training in Scona Pool paid off with fantastic results. Also, in the gym, both volleyball and basketball teams excelled this year. The junior men's and junior women's team efforts and hard work paid off - they are the current 2018 city champions. With both senior teams qualifying for provincials, Strathcona was once again an example of excellence. In basketball, both junior and senior teams performed well in metro competition and Provincials. The track and field team had an unbelievable start to their season with the Running Room Indoor Games. The women's 8x200m team highlighted Scona's success by bringing home gold.

Meanwhile, with the spring season came the Scona women's rugby trip to Ireland. The team had an amazing spring break in Dublin, practicing and playing with the Naas Rugby Club. The Junior Girls team capped off an amazing season with their second place City Championship while the Senior Men's team went on to dominate ASAA provincials, bringing home the ASAA Team Sportsmanship plaque and banner.

With the year winding down to a close, both Scona soccer and outdoor track and field teams also came together to pull off major victories for our school. The Strathcona senior men's soccer team went undefeated in the regular season, but lost a heartbreaker in the city finals, while the senior women's team worked together to become back-to-back Tier 1 City Champions. We had an amazing turnout of athletes for the start of the track and field season at Divisionals. Many athletes competed in new and favourite events, and the atmosphere at the track was a combination of teamwork and excitement. Continuing on to Track and Field City Championships, our 111 Lords united in their talent to achieve Strathcona's 49th championship title. We had 29 athletes advance to compete in Calgary for provincials. Bad weather did not stop our team from reaching the podium as all athletes did their best, despite the cold wind and rain.

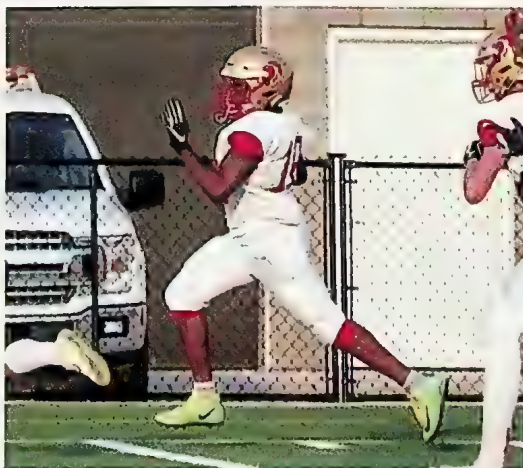

Overall, this year proved once again that Scona Lords can be proud of their athletes, who proved their enduring commitment to their school through hard work and dedication. Well Done Lords!

ACADEMICS

Academics

The impressive reputation of Strathcona High School's academic programs precedes itself. The seemingly countless opportunities that allow students to pursue and excel in various subject areas, inside and out of the classroom, enrich our school environment. Students in grades 10, 11, and 12 alike push themselves to seek betterment as students, individuals, and Scona Lords as they participate in multiple academic endeavors. This includes a wide variety of subject areas, the Science Olympics, competitions in Math and Computer Science, AP examinations, and more. In fact, the numbers speak for themselves; this year alone, over 400 students wrote over 800 AP exams, and the number of National Scholars that Scona comes out with every year are through the roof. Our AP program is known for being one of the largest in Canada, and serves to challenge and encourage students to dig deeper than the standards set out for them. AP allows students to be "surrounded by other people who are motivated and often passionate about the courses" (Jason Shukla) that they are interested in, and "broadens one's understanding in different courses" (Tinotenda Masviken). While it is believed that AP is vastly different and difficult compared to the regular program, many students agree that the appreciation that one gains in an AP course, especially if it is a subject that they are passionate about, is undeniable. The exams and the workload teach one "to think long term and to really prepare for a coming storm" (Bradley Houston).

Excellence in academics does not only mean impressive numbers and scores, however. It is also demonstrated in student enthusiasm and participation in extracurricular activities that enrich their academic performances and knowledge. Students take time out of their schedules to take on challenges and compete with friends outside of the classroom with Scona's academic competitions. The APEGA Science Olympics and the Math contests are only a few of these. These competitions are "amazing experiences that people should participate in whether or not they think they'll do well" (Katherine Li). In fact, for many, these competitions are opportunities to "compet[e] with friends and hav[e] a good time" (Katherine Li). And yet, many students agree that these opportunities benefit them in the long run. For example, the Science Olympics allow students to "work from an engineering perspective [by being] forced to come up with outside-of-the-box solutions" for hands-on problems (Jason Shukla), and the Computer Science competitions drive one to "think fast, and to think logically" (Bradley Houston).

As well, our impressive academics are only enriched with a vibrant school environment, through various events and traditions. "From meeting the teachers and students to seeing the love that students have for learning to the numerous events that go on,... appreciating every part of it made this whole year memorable" (Tinotenda Masviken). This school impacts us more than we think we know, from the outstanding support of the teachers to our welcoming aura created by the students. In fact, there are many of us who owe our experiences in high school a 'thank you', as they made us realize and allowed us to become who we want to be. For Jordan DuBarry, who is planning on pursuing a Bachelor of Science in university this upcoming fall, Ms. Williams' Bio 30 class is a big reason why he has made the decision that he has. Scona serves to encourage students to pursue what they want, to be who they want to be, and to realize who they are.

From sitting in a classroom of one's favourite subject-- whether that be languages or leadership, math or mechanics-- to participating in activities and competitions, Scona has something for everyone. The opportunities offered at Scona open possibilities for students as all of us attempt to learn more about ourselves. They help us pave our way to self-realization, and, subconsciously, lead us to fulfill our motto: "As One Who Serves."

ACADEMICS

Those first steps through Michener, creeping carefully past the crest meant more than a simple first day of school. We were big fish leaving behind our small ponds to start all over again. Our new start brought along many unique challenges.

For me, the most daunting thing about Scona was the size. Having attended schools that held no more than 350 students, coming to Scona was like moving from a farm to the big city. There were just so many people. The hallways were constantly crowded with people older and bigger than me. It was not the easy transition I had been hoping for. I know I wasn't the only one to experience this.

I knew literally one person, it was terrifying, nerve wracking coming here. I wasn't even in any classes with that person. But the people here are really nice, so it wasn't that bad.

-Hana

Throughout the year, things became easier. We became accustomed to our new school, new classes and new friends.

(The) best moment in grade 10 was when I realized that I finally belonged to a group of friends that supported me and tried to cheer me up when I was down. In every class I never felt alone because I always had someone that was by my side if I felt down.

-Naomi

Finally, after our first mid-terms, things really seemed to settle. March came and who could forget their first Bikeathon?

Bikeathon was great. Staying up for 24 hours is a lot harder than I thought it would be. You know it's early in the morning when you see a boy painting his fingernails bright pink, and wearing a face mask.

-Natalya

The rest of the year was filled with "best moments". The best parts in and outside of class that created lasting memories.

I really enjoyed playing basketball at lunch with the boys.

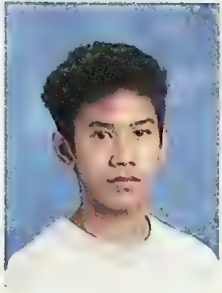

-Jaden

Now that the year is coming to an end, it's time to take a step back and think about what this year was about. It's more than a number, whether that be the 110th year or the 49th track win. It's more than winning awards, games, meets or championships. It's about finding our place in our community and our school. As grade 10s, we need to embrace the lessons that we've learned. That way, we can move on to grade 11 with more confidence than we had walking through Michener entrance on that dreaded September day.

So here's to us - we made it through the first year. May the next two be even better.

It's a constant periphery of metal lockers, and wrinkled notebook pages with scrawled reminders. Wound-up shoulders and heavy eyes constitute a focal point for self-regulated breaths and emanating distortion lines across the monitor. Become the spectra of all that you need to be doing and should be doing and that thing your teacher once said, because your cables are still loose. Yet it's when you see your best friend in the hall, waiting for you to find a sense of repose in their arms, that you make amends with the fact that you aren't a television with a system of jumbled wires. You exist as a person who is stuck between second-block Chemistry and lunch.

Be it innate or contrived, there exists a dichotomy of intentionalities within your grade eleven year. Wishes of achievement and accolades forgive the message you've been presented with; high school is for having fun. Forgiveness is learnt and given. You forgive yourself for staying up so late that your pontification over Classical Liberalism is incoherent the next day. You forgive yourself for staying in on a Friday night while your friends wonder where you are, because you work at 9 a.m. the next day, and may the universe forbid you be too tired to be productive afterwards. You forgive yourself for allowing stress to be a driving factor in your existence, while confounding who you wish to be with who you are now.

Grade eleven is a year of risk. Apply for a position and be overlooked. Smile while you tell your friends because you know you couldn't have been more genuine. It's a year of compound happiness. Friend groups change and interests fade, but the appreciation you hold doesn't deviate with circumstance. It's a year of discovering passions and rationalizing necessary discomforts. Perhaps most identifiably, it is a year of settlement. No longer bright eyed junior high kids worrying about popularity and acclimation, we find solace in effortless friendship because everything else is so effort-intense. We make peace with ourselves. New meaning is given to the adage "you can only do your best" as you attempt to disambiguate the term "best," before realizing that the "your" which precedes it denotes this as a paradoxical task. Basically, the non-sequiturs written above manifest the aforementioned disjunction of intentionalities, while allowing for little conclusion to be reached.

If nothing else, these statements serve to illustrate the disorientation and uncertainty intrinsic to the midway point of high school. You aren't humoured to the extent you were in tenth grade, but you aren't expected to have the reigned-in and gathered countenance of a twelfth grader. Resultantly, you take things as they are, reluctantly accepting that what you have yet to learn is a blessing rather than a hindrance. With deep breaths you center yourself, allotting parts of your person to all the boxes you wish to check.

However, found in these dramatics are scintillating bouts of goodness. In the people around you, comfort from the chaos exists. Your teacher's lighthearted mocking pronounces that life isn't hit or miss; if you want something enough, there is a walkable path to its achievement. In the friends with whom you share grief and fear, you are reminded of the merit pertaining to everything you've done thus far. It's in a gym of cycling kids half-asleep, or in a library of oscillating shushes, that an almost-humorous wave of realization declares how good you have it. It's walking into the Michener entrance and seeing pancakes, before looking down at shaking hands, that stops you from forgetting the compassion and care in the world.

It's at this equidistant point, that the earnest goals and intentions for the rest of your life meet with the naive and self-proclaimed jadedness of the teenage form. It's here, where you acknowledge the weight of the future but realize that you're going to be fine regardless, that grade eleven exists. It's your first exposure to the rawness of responsibility and individuality, but never mind that because you'll still take your pulse and look yourself in the eye. Self assurance incessantly echoes as you close your locker door, tucking wires away. You hold the notebook to your chest and smile, because more than anyone else, you know that you're going to be okay.

FINE ARTS

Fine Arts

In my high school decision, arts was a significant factor

My little grade-nine self went to open house after open house, scouring the building for other kids who looked artsy and then (since I'm a visual arts kid, through and through) beelining to the art room.

I can say with certainty that the visual arts program at Scona impressed me. The artwork laid out was fantastic, but more than that - there were so many kids there just willing to talk to me about it and who sounded genuine in their praise of it. I felt immediately drawn to the community.

However, the notable thing about this experience wasn't how I felt in my visual arts comfort zone, but how I felt when I came into contact with the other programs that night.

The graphic arts program was inviting, the band kids gave a stellar performance, and I'd never considered myself a potential theatre kid, but watching them perform (this year it had been 'Rent' from - well - Rent) captivated me.

It stunned me how much there was to do. And even more so, I felt weirdly nervous and excited at the prospect that I could participate in any of it that I wanted to. This school and this arts program felt intimidatingly inviting.

Three years later, I can say I'm glad I accepted that invitation.

There's a couple of reasons for my love of the arts program here at Scona; one of which is the diversity of the average art student's participation. There aren't really just 'tech kids' or 'graphic arts kids' - many people are involved in two, three, or more of the arts programs offered at Scona.

I also value the close-knitness of our arts wing. There's uniqueness in the way students from different disciplines and areas bond together and find community in those who may not participate in or even fully understand their art. This is quite evident when we have an arts related event (like our annual musicals, dance showcase, band performances, or art exhibitions, to name a few), and I see people from all different disciplines showing up to support their art peers in their respective endeavours.

I think qualities like these were also made especially clear during the New York arts trip in November. Multiple art students I talked to listed this as their favourite arts event this year, and I'm inclined to agree with them. There's something about a trip focused specifically on the arts (and being surrounded by people who appreciate it like you do) that make an experience like that unforgettable.

A big reason why I think this trip was so impactful has to do with the things I mentioned before. While students were divided into their respective arts and sometimes separated into different activities based on this, we often had things that we did all together. This included dinner in Times Square, going to the top of the Empire State Building, as well as events that were sometimes more focused towards one area (Broadway shows, or some time together in the MoMA). It's indicative of our community that I (and others) found these moments to be the highlight of the trip. We had the most fun when we got to experience art - of any kind - all together, and appreciate the company of the people around us in an entirely new environment.

This experience wasn't exclusive to New York - there were many other events during the year that made me appreciate the closeness and diversity of talent of Scona art students. For one thing, the performances of Big Fish (our musical this year), were of spectacular quality (and I wasn't the only one who thought so - Scona brought home 15 Cappies awards). The annual Dance Showcase (much of which was student-choreographed) brought to fruition the sweat and tears of the dance students to create a beautiful result. Band students impressed at every event, including this year's Brats in the Park (music at the Hawrelak Park Amphitheatre!). All of these were attended by art students from different areas who wanted to support their friends.

One of my favourite events (though I may be biased) was the Art Silent Auction and Exhibition of the end of the year. This event (similar to all other art events at Strathcona) definitely shone because of the tireless efforts of the staff who gave their time to make it happen. However, the students had a part in this too: it was our small group of Art 30 AP students who picked the theme for this year's art auction. The one we came up with was "niche" (generally meaning a job or role within a bigger system). This was because, simply put, we all felt like we filled a role within the arts community. Our art was all significantly different in style, in subject matter, in colour scheme - but all of it held value, defined who we were, and said what we wanted to say in the context of arts at Scona.

I think this theme is a spot-on representation of the arts here.

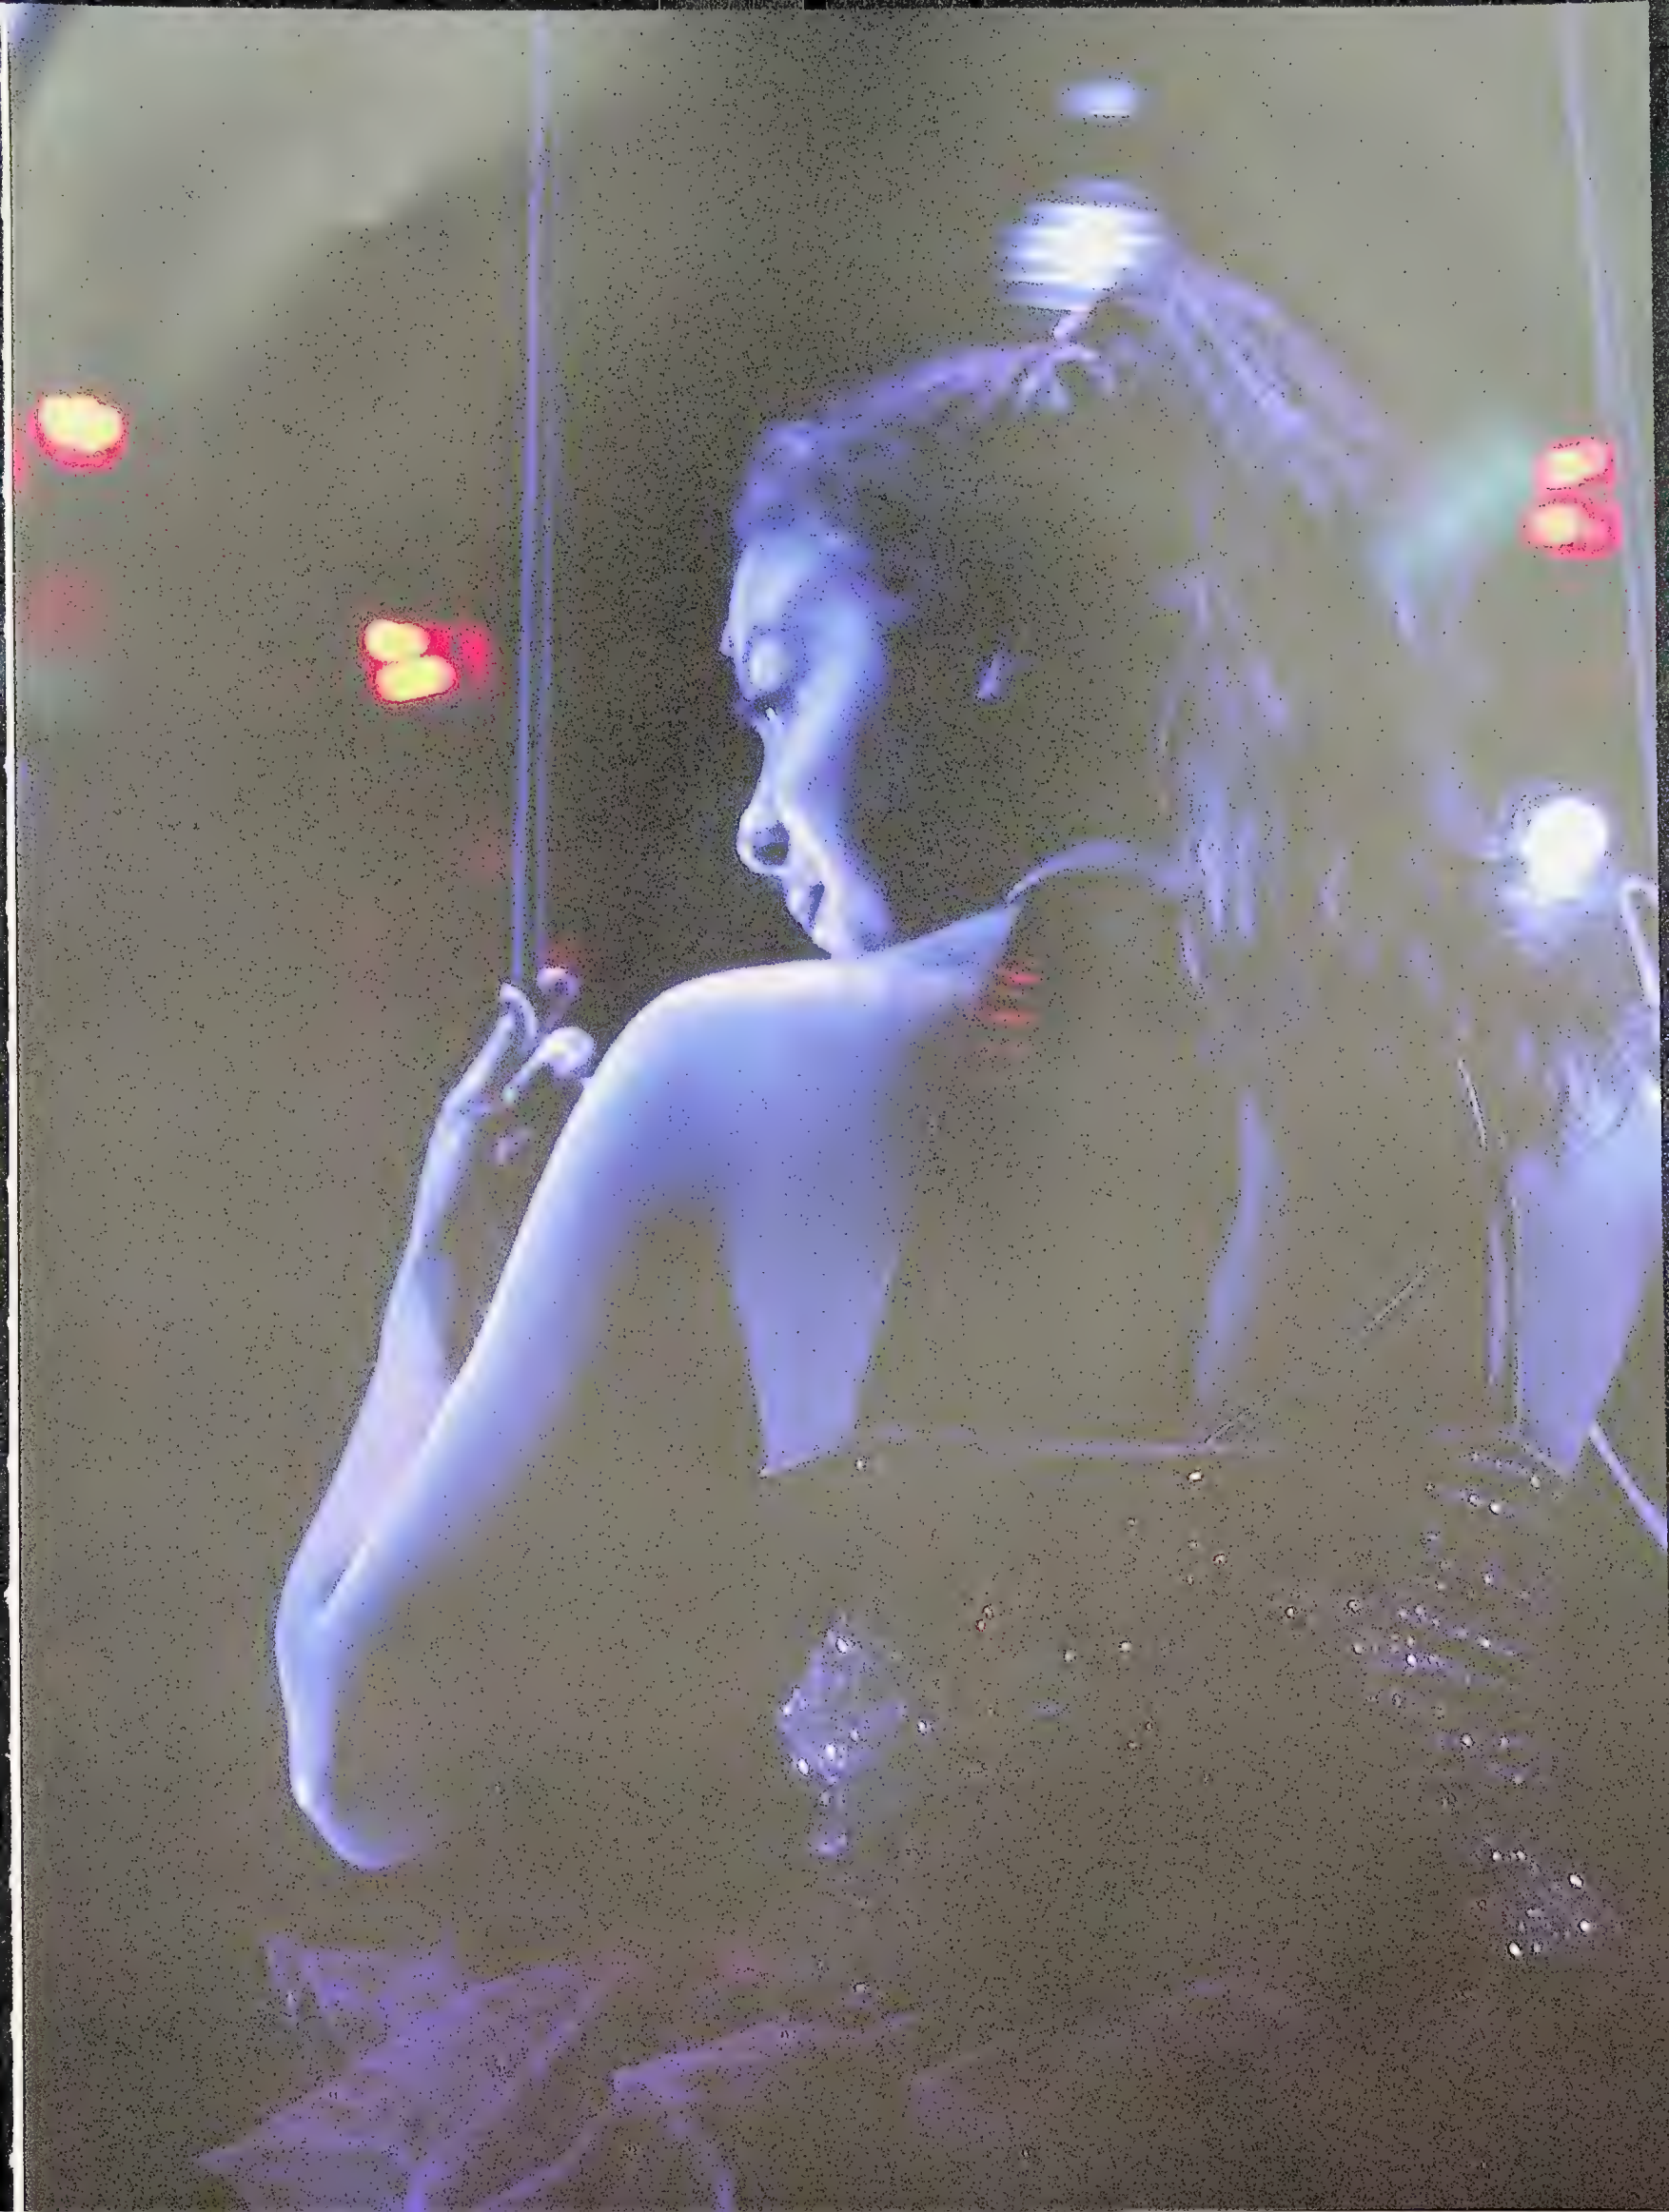

In a school like Scona, it's easy to feel overwhelmed when faced with all the opportunities available. It's a big environment, too. There's so many people - to the point where I, a grade 12 student, am still finding faces in the hallways I don't recognize. I remember, in early grade 10, feeling a bit lost in the jungle.

After a little while, though, I learned to count myself lucky to be an art student here.

In the ecosystem of Strathcona, art students have a place to grow, share, and express ourselves. We have the opportunity to learn from people talented in many areas, and the ability to become those people, as well. We support each other. We make memories, and we make art.

Most importantly, we have a role we can fill - a place to thrive. And really, what else could we ask for?

It was a rainy afternoon, and coffee shop tunes blared as I sat in the local Starbucks, mint tea in hand while contentedly waiting for my muffin to be warmed up. I had forgotten my phone in my car and naturally I was quite bored, so it was a nice surprise when an old lady almost barrelled me down. She didn't seem to notice, and hustled her way over to a table with a white-haired woman, and a gentleman rocking an outdated Bass Pro hat.

"You'll never believe what I stumbled across the other day!" She whipped out a thin book with the letter S embossed on the front in a boxy, yellow font, and the year 2019 printed neatly below. The seated woman's eyes went wide with delight, and she snatched the book away.

"Our year grade twelve yearbook?" She leafed through the pages, a grin creeping onto her face as she passed through the athletics section.

"Thaddeus, you look closer to having a heart attack than you do now!" She flipped the book towards the man and pointed to a much younger version of him, who was pictured red-faced and stumbling over the finish line of a track. The man grumbled, some combination of annoyance and appreciation crossing his face.

"You know, I'd never run a three thousand meter when I signed up for that race. I was so tired that I lost track of my laps, and ran the first ever three thousand four-hundred meter." The woman chuckled, her fingers tracing the page with a nostalgic grace as Thaddeus continued on.

"Track was so reflective of the Scona community, it was never about being number one in every event. It was all about the connections - especially as a grade twelve. You had to show off to the young guns that even if you're not totally on board with track, it's still important to show up. Forty-nine years we won following that model! Say, what do you think they're at now, Anna?" The woman who nearly ran me over strolled back from ordering a latte, and guffawed at Thaddeus as if he asked her to recite the first three-hundred digits of pi.

"You think I would know that?" The woman holding the year book, who I'm assuming was named Johanna, based on the name tag on her blouse, set the book down and gave Anna a contemplative look.

"In all seriousness Anna, what do you remember from grade twelve?" The woman took a sip from her latte and pulled up a chair.

"You know, the year itself went so fast, but it was when I became closer with the people at Scona. I swear in grade twelve the social barriers dissolved." Thaddeus nodded in approval, scratching his chin like a wise old man before reminiscing himself.

"You're right on that, but for me, I remember just struggling! It was like a hurdles race. I had to overcome some huge obstacles, and I was so tired, but in the end I still reached the finish line!"

"Thaddeus, you sure seem to talk a lot about track considering you were truly a member of the leadership cult." The trio laughed, and Thaddeus, who was now in possession of the book, lightly examined the photos from the graduation banquet. His eyes landed on a picture of a girl's hand placed on a boy's suit jacket, her acrylic nails beautifully contrasting her corsage, which matched the rose in her date's pocket.

"I swear every single girl took one of these photos," lamented Thaddeus. Johanna peered over her reading glasses, her forehead an accordion as the skin stretched taut in focus, then bunched up in delight once the photo became clear.

"Oh! That was for the, uh, the, the VCSO!"

"Jo, do you mean for VSCO?"

"VSCO! Yes VSCO. You know, maybe I can get into my account!" She opened her massive Mary Poppins' bag, pulling out an assortment of books, lip glosses, and mints, until she finally found her vintage Iphone XX. She grumbled as her face ID failed three times before letting her in, and scrolled through her various gardening and cooking apps before tapping a while square, with a black circle in it.

"Oh! Here it is!" She spun her phone around to face Thaddeus, who sat across from her. Anna shoved her head over Johanna's shoulder in disbelief.

"There's no way that app still exists. Next you're going to tell me Webkinz is still around." Johanna didn't respond, occupied with trying to puzzle out her password. She slid her fingers over the keys, a buzz loud enough for her deaf ears resounding every time she guessed incorrectly.

"Ah, I give up." She tossed her phone back into the sea that was her purse and tuned back into the conversation of her comrades, who were arguing about Thursday mornings in grade twelve.

"Late starts were great! I had a spare every morning and I didn't have to be at school until ten thirty!" argued Anna. Thaddeus shook his head vigorously, barely listening to Anna as he launched into yet another tangent.

"No, you see, every Thursday, I would wake up to my usual seven O'clock alarm. I would brush my hair, get dressed, eat some toast. And then I would just be putting my shoes on, and I would realize, it's Thursday! I didn't have to be at school for another hour! Did we have a late start in grade ten? No. Grade eleven? No! So every morning I would forget. And obviously I would go back to bed in my clothes, take a little nap you know? But then I wouldn't set an alarm, and I'd totally oversleep, and then it's nine-thirty and I'm barely out the door! I think every late I had on my record was on a Thursday." Anna rolled her eyes, and her responding argument faded to background noise as my attention slid to the steaming blueberry muffin waiting for me on the counter. I nodded at the barista and gave a quick thank you before heading towards the exit. Glancing at the spirited group one last time, thoughts of my own looming high school experience swam through my head, but they were quickly stunted at the sight of my "Strathcona School Special" bus driving away three minutes earlier than expected. Clearly I had at least one thing in common with Thaddeus, on this gloomy, Thursday morning.

GRADUATION

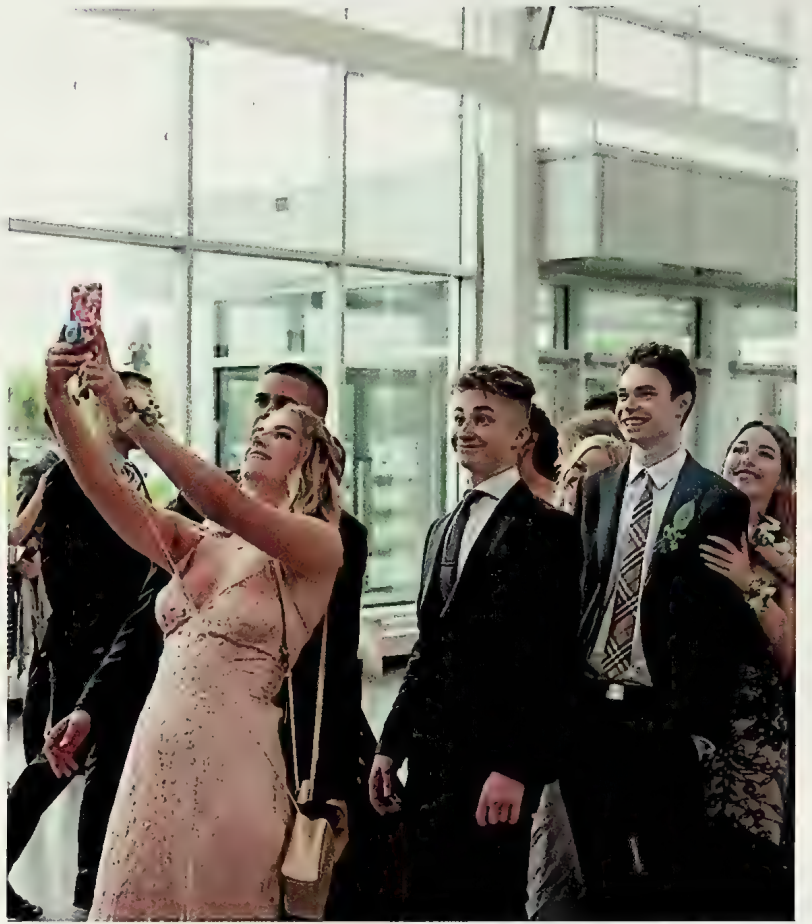

BANQUET

VALEDICTORIAN ADDRESS

Katherine Li & Jason Shukla

Good evening parents, teachers, honoured guests and of course our fellow graduates. You may not know us and we may not know you...

Actually, you most definitely don't know either of us, but that doesn't matter because we aren't here to talk about ourselves. We aren't even here to impart some form of wisdom about the future onto you, because the two of us know just as much about life as you do, and to try to give life advice to all of you would be an exercise in futility. For those of you that have been taught by Mrs. Janzen, you know that she would always say to "push for insight!" So this evening, Katherine and I are going to ATTEMPT to push for insight in front of all of you.

From what I have seen in the last 3 years, Scona has been incredible at redefining what success means. Maybe success used to mean 5 consecutive years as track and field city champions, then later it meant 10, then 20, and now they've just reached the 49th consecutive year as the reigning city champs. Maybe success just meant the swim team taking home one medal from cities, but now it's been 33 years of Scona dominating at cities. For Scona, success has never been a fixed goal post. As soon as we cross one line, we draw another 50 yards away. Clearly, Scona has excelled at redefining success. In keeping with the strong tradition at Scona and our motto "As One Who Serves", it is important that we acknowledge who we are and how we achieve our personal success. How can you serve others if you don't even know what you can offer the world? To do this, we often have to put ourselves first in a way some may consider selfish. Seeing as this stage is so crucial in one's life, it is perhaps time to redefine what selfishness really is.

As graduates, we are entering a time in our lives where we have to think and make decisions for ourselves. Almost inevitably, the issue will come up as to whether we should be making choices that satisfy our own personal goals or whether we should be taking other factors into consideration, such as what our parents want for us. Of course, it may seem inconsiderate to put your dreams ahead of everyone and everything else that was once close to you, but maybe—just maybe—it's all a matter of perception. So, Katherine and I would like to offer a humble proposition. We would like to offer another way of looking at what selfishness really is. All too often, it is perceived as selfish to put one's needs and desires first. It could come in the form of taking a gap year—rather than going straight into university—to backpack across Europe and truly discover yourself, as cliché as that may sound. It could come in the form of turning down plans with friends because you really just need some time alone to decompress. Our belief is that these kinds of choices are healthy, not selfish. To be the best version of oneself requires some years of self-prioritization.

Parents always wish the best for their children, and teachers have been our mentors for 12 years now. The majority of our life has been under the orders of another. And when we don't listen to those orders we are deemed as unruly, selfish, and brash. We have been told to sit down quietly. To raise our hands if we want to talk. But, we're graduating now and many of us are already adults.

Now, we clearly aren't the wisest people here, but we do like to think that maybe, now's the time when all of you can be making these choices for yourselves. Treat yo self. Take a self-care day. Our generation is already great at this stuff. Baby boomers and Gen X-ers will describe us Gen Z-ers as self-centered, as if that's something to be ashamed of. But why should we not put ourselves first? We're the ones that have a future to worry about, and it's entirely up to us to ensure that we haven't reached some sort of apocalypse scenario by the time we're in charge of the world.

And I know it isn't easy to let go of your sense of responsibility to others. Even for myself, I don't really know what I want to do. Your little pamphlets say I'm going into the sciences but a part of myself has a lot of doubt. People throw around phrases like "but that's such a waste" if I even consider anything outside of med school. But why should it be a waste? I'm keeping my options open, and if somewhere down the line I realize that I made a mistake, it's better that I got to make that mistake on my own terms, rather than for someone else's sake. In Fyodor Dostoevsky's words, "To go wrong in one's own way is better than to go right in someone else's." It really comes down to listening to your internal voice. As graduates, we are all ending a chapter in our life. For some of you, high school was a time where we were really able to branch out, try new things, and form strong relationships with the people around us. But some of us may not have had such a great experience. Social groups formed and solidified while some people were left out. Some of us in the audience may have felt like they never quite found their place, and may be glad to be done with high school entirely.

Regardless, each and every one of us came to form a public image of ourselves, whether intentionally or not. And the annoying thing about high school was that these images tended to stick with us. When everyone around you expects you to behave in a certain way, it's hard to break from that mold, because any deviation leaves the door open to judgement. But this is exactly where the prospect of paving your own path comes into play. If you were known as a bookworm or an athletic type, a social butterfly or a bit of a recluse, why not try and subvert that? There is absolutely no need to hold yourselves up to others' expectations.

In the classic John Hughes film The Breakfast Club, a group of five students each seem to exhibit the stereotypical attributes of school cliques: there is "a brain, and an athlete, and a basketcase, a princess, and a criminal". Forced to keep each other company during one Saturday detention period, the five of them soon realize their personas are merely a product of the narrow expectations placed on each of them—and they're struggling to keep it up. As a response to the assignment that their assistant principal gave them—to write a thousand-word essay about "who they think they are"—the group instead writes about how others had judged them using "the most convenient definitions"; in other words, their outer identity had been unfairly shaped by simplistic, one-dimensional presumptions.

I believe that each and every one of us is worth more than a single-word definition. Take it as a challenge; to go out and do things that would come as a surprise to the people that knew you in high school. Obviously, I'm not suggesting that a drastic change in personality is necessary to find your "true self", but if it feels right and if it feels like "you," then maybe don't worry about what other people think. Because there is no better person to steer the ship than the person who lives in it.

In no way are we trying to diminish the profound effect other people have had on us. I'm sure most of us here know someone who has greatly helped us grow as people whether that be a parent, a teacher, or a friend. None of us would be here today if it weren't for the help of others. So thank you to all of those who have supported us. And with that, we would like to extend our heartfelt thanks to the amazing teachers who have helped all of us in a multitude of areas and have been there for us in our darkest times: Bozeman Science, Crash Course, Wikipedia and Khan Academy. Where would any of us be without you guys.

In all seriousness, Thank you staff and teachers who have also given up many hours to help us, teach us, and connect with us. I'm sure many of you had to endure more than what is generally expected of teachers. And of course, thank you parents who have put so much time and effort into raising us for about 18 years now. Children are a big strain on the wallet, but I hope we made up for it in someway.

Finally, let's get real for a minute here. Though our spirits may be high upon leaving this school, we're about to enter into a much larger arena where excellence has no bounds. We are not all meant to become politicians, athletes, leaders, game-changers or record-breakers. Except maybe our SU president Alex Erickson. Without a doubt, there will be people out there whose excellence seems unattainable and that's the reality we all have to accept. The good thing is, though, we don't really need to think about those other people. As so eloquently put in the timeless song All Star by Smash Mouth:

"So much to do, so much to see

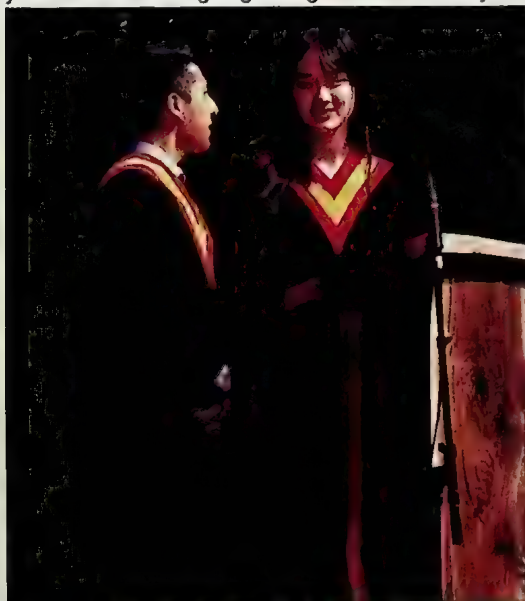

So what's wrong with taking the back streets?

You'll never know if you don't go

You'll never shine if you don't glow"

In these years to come, forge your own path and make valuable mistakes because as cliché as it may sound, we do learn from them. Only in discovering the person we truly want to be can we live up to the motto "As One Who Serves". We are not saying that you should be selfish; we are saying that putting yourself first isn't necessarily always selfish.

Whether you're going straight into university, or taking a few years off, or you're going straight into the workforce. Whether these were the best three years of your life or ones you would like to put behind. Congratulations. For now, I would like to ask you to disregard the past and disregard the future because in this moment, we're graduating and that's a huge milestone that everyone here should be proud of. Congratulations.

CLASS HISTORIAN

Hannah Christie

For the past three years, we have dragged our feet about completing assignments, complained about sitting in a desk for 5 and 1/3 hours a day, and dreaded getting up before noon. And after three years you'd think there would be nothing but pure joy and excitement at graduation. However, standing up here tonight in front of my classmates, teachers, and all of our parents, amidst all of the nervous excitement, there's a melancholic sense of longing as well. As exciting as graduating and moving on to new adventures is, there is still a lingering sense of comfort and security that walking through the halls of Scona and seeing familiar faces brings.

When I think of what is soon to come - whether that's university, travel, or new jobs - I get the same nervous butterflies that I did my first time visiting Scona. When I first walked through the doors and read the sign that said "Through these halls walk Champions," I thought to myself, that must be an exaggeration, how can every student be a "champion." Now, however, when I walk past these signs I couldn't agree more. The word "Champion" applies to Scona in every sense of the word. It can be seen through the four founding pillars of Scona- the outstanding academic programs offered, the legacy that follows our athletics program, the award winning arts programs, and finally our record breaking leadership program. In the past three years that we have been students at Scona, our 24 sports teams have won 26 City Championships, and 3 Provincial titles. The Scona Theater Company has been nominated for a total of 57 Cappie Awards, as well as, this year's musical - Big Fish - was named one of the top ten things to do in Edmonton during the time it was open. And finally, through the Scona Initiative, we have raised over 1.5 million dollars for organizations such as the Jack Davis Hope Foundation, Earth Group, and Doctors Without Borders. This word champion weaves its way around and between these pillars, flowing through the abundance of clubs, extra-curricular activities, and programs that call Scona home. From the Founding Cultures Club, to D'nD, Model UN, and the Culinary Arts Club, there's something for everyone here at Scona.

Of course, all of these extraordinary opportunities would be impossible without the amazing support of the staff here at Strathcona. Our teachers and administrators spend countless hours at the school coaching teams, running clubs, planning events and more, all for the benefit of their students. We are so lucky to be surrounded by staff members who are so passionate about their jobs and committed to helping students achieve excellence. For we as human beings, are shaped by the people around us. When we are little, these influential people are our parents. As we grow a little older, these people may expand to include siblings and family members. Once we enter school, however, our family is no longer the sole influence leading us into the future as they pass on their trust to our teachers; to teach us, to influence us, and to help us grow. I am so thankful to say that the teachers here at Strathcona have not only helped me grow as a student, but grow to be a better, stronger person. I am certain that sitting here, every single one of us can think of a teacher who we connected with, someone who took the time to get to know us, someone who influenced who we are today - I know I can think of many. So to our teachers, our administrators, and our support staff, I would like to thank you for the time, dedication, and commitment you have put into giving us our best chance at success as we move into the future. Thank you for being you.

To finish off, I'd like to circle back to grade 10. Something that stuck with me throughout my entire time here at Scona was an idea shared with us that beginning week of grade 10 and continued through to the end of the year. I remember sitting in one of the red plastic chairs in the main gym, in continued awe of the the grade 12s, listening to them talk about legacy and the impact they wanted to leave behind, and they asked us "what do you want your legacy to be." While I was writing this speech, I had some trouble trying to sum up the "legacy" that our class will leave behind us. I realized that while I can list off all the incredible accomplishments we've had in academics, athletics, the arts, and leadership- for I'm pretty sure we all know that there are many- if I did, I wouldn't even come close to describing the long-lasting legacy that we as a class will leave. The Scona Lords that came before us set the stones for what is to be- what already is- a strong school community full of pride, inclusivity, and support, and this year has been no exception. In the three weeks leading up to Bikeathon there was some sort of fundraising event every day in Mitchner Entrance or Caf Landing, over 60 students participated as either cast or crew in the musical Big Fish, 400 students bravely wrote over 800 AP exams, and finally this year over 500 students attended the annual Fan Bus, braving the cold and snowy conditions to cheer on our Scona Lords Football team, proving once again, the outstanding commitment that we, Scona Lords, have for making our school community that little bit stronger, one step at a time.

To my classmates and peers- the graduating class of 2019- thank you for the commitment and dedication you have shown over the past three years to creating a strong and inclusive school community. Now as we move into the next stage of our life, remember this: when we walked into Scona on the first day of Grade 10, on the surface we were no different than any of the classes that had come before us. An ordinary group of nervous but excited students, ready to tackle any challenges that high school would throw at us. And tonight, again we look no different- ready to face any new challenges that life poses. But when one takes a closer look that the past three years, it is clear that this class is anything but ordinary. We never backed down from a challenge, nor were we intimidated by the expectations set by past classes. Whether it was a city championship streak, or a fundraising record, we happily accepted the challenge and pushed to succeed. And it is these acts of bravery that will define the legacy that we- the class of 2019- will leave behind to inspire future classes.
